The Deep Sea Lead.
In order to find a ship's position when approaching the land in a fog soundings are taken with the "deep sea lead." This lead weighs twenty-eight pounds and is attached to a line which is marked off in fathoms by bands of various colors, pieces of leather and knots. Bored in the base of the lead is a hole about two inches deep, and this is filled with tallow, so that the gravel or shells at the ocean bottom will adhere to it, and the nature of the bed may be thus ascertained. When the lead is thrown overboard the water's depth is noted on the line, and this and the adherence to the tallow when compared with the description given on the chart will give the ship's position with tolerable accuracy.

The Famous Mamelukes.
The Mamelukes were a body of soldiers who ruled Egypt for several hundred years. Their name is derived from an Arab word which means slave, and they were originally captives from Caucasian countries. In the middle of the thirteenth century they were introduced into Egypt as the sultan's body guard, but upon the accession of Turan Shah, whom they hated, they overthrew him and elected one of themselves in his place. For nearly 300 years they held the power thus usurped, and even when compelled to resign it they had much influence in Egypt. In 1811 nearly all the Mamelukes were massacred by Mohammed Ali, and those who had escaped to Nubia were destroyed in 1820.

The Pillars of Hercules.
The "Pillars of Hercules" was the name anciently given to the mountains of Calpe and Abyla, standing opposite to each other, the one on the European and the other on the African shore of the strait which connects the Mediterranean sea with the Atlantic ocean. The mountains are now called the Rock of Gibraltar and Jebel Zanzur. The word Gibraltar, which is at present also applied to the strait, was originally "Jebel Tarik," or "Mountain of Tarik," Tarik being the name of the leader of the first Mohammedan band which crossed at that point over into Spain in the year A. D. 710.

Common Names.
All nations have their Smiths, Joneses and Robinsons. In France the name which is used to signify one of a very large number of men, as Smith is sometimes figuratively used with us, is Durand, the commonest name in the French directories. In Berlin and other cities of north Germany Herr Meyer is Mr. Smith. But in some parts of Germany the name of Schulze is the most common name.

Encouragement.
New Clerk—I think I understand the business pretty well now. Employer—Yes? Keep at it four or five years. Perhaps you'll understand it then as well as you think you do now.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Used to Questions.
Lawyer—I really hope I don't annoy you with all these questions? Fair client—Not at all. I'm used to it. I have a six-year-old son.

THE GRAVE OF ELIA.
Hutton's Effort to Find the Tomb of Charles Lamb.
Hutton's "Literary Landmarks of London" was largely a labor of love and was the result of years of hard work. Mr. Hutton knew this example of the difficulties that stood in his way. Another Sunday afternoon I devoted to a pious pilgrimage to the grave of Charles Lamb at Edmonton. As usual, nobody at Edmonton knew anything. The churchyard is not a small one, and it is entirely alien. The sexton and the gravedigger and a few persons waiting about could give me no information. Most of them had never heard of Mr. Lamb, and I could not find the sacred spot. Naturally I applied to the sexton, and he left the vestry door after service leading on the arm of a pretty young woman I approached him, raised my hat and asked politely if he could tell me where Charles and Mary Lamb were resting. Really he could not say. And I, forgetting the day, the place and his sacred office, cursed that sexton for his criminal ignorance.

"Great heavens," I said, "you ought to be ashamed of yourself. In your care have been placed the ashes of one of the foremost men in the whole history of English letters. And you don't know where they are! They have made your churchyard and your parish distinguished all the world over. I have come 3,000 miles to wait Charles Lamb's grave, and you, the sexton of the church, don't know where it is! You ought to be heartily ashamed of yourself. And I turned upon my heel and left him standing there speechless and confounded."

Half an hour after the above incident occurred and while Hutton was groping around the graveyard in the twilight the sexton came to him, hat in hand, apologized most humbly for his ignorance, which he had corrected in the meantime, and conducted him to the grave of the immortal Elia.

A VOCABULARY TEST.
Some Words Strange to You That Are in the Dictionary.
The number of obsolete words that are to be found in Webster's Dictionary is considerably larger than people have any idea of. The following letter, written by an alleged poet to an editor who had treated his poetry with derision, furnishes some idea of them. "Sir, you have behaved like an impetuous scrooge! Like those who, envious of any moral attitude, carry their enmity to the height of creating synonymously the second words which my polyanthus genius uses with liberty to abrogate the tongues of the west. Sir, you have crassly parodied my own pet words as though they were trigrams. I will not conserve reproaches. I will expose a veil over the atramentous ingratitude which has characterized even my indiscreet heart. I am silent on the occasion which my coadjuvancy must have given you when I offered to become your fan and admirer. I will not speak of the lipitude, the obsequy, you have shown in exacerbating me, one whose genius you should have approached with mental discrimination. So I tell you, without supercilious words, nothing will render ignominious your conduct to me. I warn you that I would villicate your nose if I thought that any moral diarrhoea thereby could be performed—if I thought I should not impugn your reputation. Go, tachygraphic scrooge, band with your crass ignominious fan; draw objections from the thought, if you can, of having cynically lost the extinction of the greatest poet since Milton."

And yet all these words are to be found in the dictionary.—Chicago Journal.

Multiple Screws.
Multiple screws were used as early as the American civil war on certain vessels known as "tin clads" on the Mississippi, their adoption being necessitated by the shallow draft. The great advantage they possess in securing a vessel against total disablement and for maneuvering soon made them the rule in the navy. They were much longer in coming into use in the merchant service. But since the era of the very large transatlantic steamers, beginning with the Paris and New York and the Teutonic and Mauretania, all very large vessels have been built with twin screws.

The Wig.
The wig is older than civilization, for the savage used one to make him more formidable on the field of battle. The French revolution killed the article as a piece of headgear. Before the guillotine fell in France the wigs which adorned the heads of its victims cost $150 to $200. The costly decoration lingered a long time on official heads in England. So recently as 1858 Archbishop Sumner found it necessary to wear one at the marriage of the princess royal.

A Consistent Career.
"I can remember when the wealthy Mr. Hilden didn't have a dollar of his own," said the man who dispenses. "Well," answered the misanthrope, "it is said that he is still doing business entirely with other people's dollars."—Washington Star.

The Ant's Ancestry.
"What makes Judge Ant so stuck up? Is he any better than the rest of us?"
"Is he? Why, say, the judge is a direct descendant of the ant that the sluggard was sent to."—Puck.

To Ascertain Your Brain Power.
Do you possess well formed and evenly balanced features? This is the rule: Judge for yourself. The height of your forehead, from your hair to the line of your brow, should be the same as the length of your nose, and both should be commensurate with the depth from the base of your nose to the extremity of your chin, so making three equal divisions. Have you an excess or deficiency of brain power? This question you may answer to your own satisfaction by contrasting the bulk of your head visible above or below a line drawn horizontally through the center of each eye and which normally divides the head into two equal parts.

KEEP YOUR HEAD.
Now One Woman Lost Her Temper and Her Art Treasures.
Apropos of the woman with the ability to plan a big coup and who then loses it and her head at the last moment an auctioneer in New York tells an interesting story. The woman was an American who had been living abroad with her husband for many years. Upon his death she returned, bringing with her a large collection of valuable paintings which had been his property and which she hoped to sell. She made arrangements with the auctioneer to handle them for her, and he was delighted with the cleverness with which she had obtained vouchers for each one. It showed enterprise and thoroughness seldom found in men or women and made it certain that the pictures, which were really good ones, would bring good prices.

To every one living who had been in any way connected with the pictures, owned them or handled them the woman had gone for a written guarantee, and in addition to the names obtained in this way, she had been to the American consul, and he in his turn had guaranteed their signatures. They were all sworn to and duly witnessed, and the auctioneer congratulated the woman.

That was all right until Uncle Sam stepped in. The custom house authorities, though unable to obtain possession of the guarantees, appreciated the pictures, estimated them to be worth their full value as understood by the owner, and put duties upon them entirely beyond the woman's power to pay. She was greatly distressed at first, then annoyed and finally furiously angry at what she considered an imposition. The auctioneer endeavored to console her.

"They will be sold for little or nothing at the custom house sale," he said, "and the best thing to do is to buy them in. They will go for $10 or $15 apiece, and we will have the sale after all. I will buy them in for you, and we will both make a 'pot of money' out of them."

But by that time the woman was too astute to listen to advice. She considered that she had been badly treated. If the custom house wished to keep her pictures from her, very well, they might have them. She tore up the guarantees, the pictures were sold for next to nothing and scattered no one knows where now and the woman lost a small fortune.—New York Times.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.
People flirt with trouble too much. Every big fire develops a lot of natural born fire chiefs. It is all right to select the lesser of two evils if you know which one it is. The way some people have of being good is worse than their way of being bad. When people say to you when you are in trouble "What can I do for you?" be equally considerate and say, "Nothing." People are hard to please. If a man gets mad easily he is called "touchy," and if it takes a good deal to make him mad he is called "wooden."

It is a shame when the baby wakes up once in the night and the father is awake for ten minutes that he should lose "his whole night's rest." Isn't it, now?—Athenian Globe.

John Wesley's Wife.
John Wesley married a widow, Mrs. Vizzelle, who grew tired of his restlessness, laborious life and complained. He paid no attention, and from complaint she went on to jealousy, thence to fury. He rebuked her sternly: "Do not any longer contend for mastery, for power, money or praise. Be content to be a private, insignificant person. Of what importance is your character to mankind? If you were buried just now or had never lived, what loss would it be to the cause of God?" She left him, taking with her a large number of his private papers, and he dismissed the subject by writing in his journal: "I did not forsake her. I did not dismiss her. I shall not call her back."

Horsepower.
The difference between nominal, indented and effective horsepower often puzzles people. Nominal horsepower is an assumed quantity, used for the convenience of makers and buyers in describing the dimensions of the engines. Indicated horsepower is the amount shown by computations of the indicator diagram. Effective or actual horsepower is the work an engine can do or the difference between the indicated horsepower and the horsepower required to drive the engine when unloaded.

A Straight Tip.
"Say," growled the first hobo, "why didn't you get that big house an' git a hand out?"
"Why, I started ter," replied the other, "but a minister lookin' gu' gimme a tip not ter. He sez: 'Turn from your present path. Ye're goin' terple dogs.'"—Philadelphia Press.

At the close of an address during an educational campaign in Ireland questions were invited. A man was making for the platform when he received a whack over the head with a stick. He was stunned and had to be carried out amid an uproar. When ordered was restored the chairman rose and blandly asked: "Is there any other gentleman who would like to ask a question?" Needless to say, there was not.

OPEN PUBLICITY THE BEST GUARANTEE OF MERIT.
When the master of a medicine, sold through druggists for family use, takes his patients into his confidence by having and having his medicine broadcast as well as on its bottle wrapper, a full list of all its ingredients in plain English, and a carefully published record of the most prominent evidence that he is not afraid to have the searchlight of investigation turned full upon his formula and that it will bear the closest scrutiny and the most thorough investigation, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for the cure of the weaknesses, periodical pains and irregularities of the female system, is the only medicine put up for sale through druggists for women's special use, the maker of which is not afraid to take his patients into his full confidence by such open and honest publicity.

A glance at the published ingredients on each bottle wrapper, will show that it is made wholly from native, American, medicinal roots, that it contains no poisonous or habit-forming drugs, no narcotics and no alcohol—pure, triple-refined glycerine, of power strength being used instead of the commonly employed alcohol, both for extracting and preserving the active medicinal properties found in the roots of the American forest plants employed. It is the only medicine for women's peculiar diseases, sold by druggists that does not contain a large percentage of alcohol, which is in the long run so harmful to woman's delicate nervous system. Now, glycerine is perfectly harmless, and serves a valuable purpose by possessing intrinsic value all its own, and besides it enhances the curative effect of the other ingredients entering into the "Favorite Prescription."

Some of the ablest medical writers and teachers endorse these views and praise all the several ingredients of which "Favorite Prescription" is composed—recommending them for the cure of the very same diseases for which this world-famed medicine is advised. No other medicine for women has any such professional endorsement—worthy of such a number of ordinary testimonials. If interested, send name and address to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., for his little book of extracts from the works of eminent medical writers and teachers, endorsing the several ingredients and telling just what Dr. Pierce's medicine is made of. It's free for the asking.

THE COLUMBIA MACHINE is the Best

People flirt with trouble too much. Every big fire develops a lot of natural born fire chiefs. It is all right to select the lesser of two evils if you know which one it is. The way some people have of being good is worse than their way of being bad. When people say to you when you are in trouble "What can I do for you?" be equally considerate and say, "Nothing."

HIT BY A SHELL.
A Writer in a Boer Engagement Describes His Feelings.
Soon their gunners got our distance, and shells were screaming and bursting over the covert. Says Robert McCaw in "A Prisoner With De Wet" in the National Magazine. Several wagons in front of us were blown up and the oxen scattered in writhing masses on the road. The Kaffir who led our team took fright and bolted, the oxen swerved as a shell burst in front of them, and the wheels suddenly went into a deep rut, the heavy wagon turned completely over, grinding me beneath its weight. My head bursting, I was falling down through blackness in the midst of a thousand crimson serpents. Somebody held my heart in his hand, was squeezing it, and then—Thank heaven, this is death.

Agnes after there was a roaring of waters far beneath me. Then I thundered on my naked brain. A faint star was shining somewhere. It rushed toward me, growing bigger and bigger, until I was swallowed up in it, and my eyes were open. The wagon was righted. I was dripping wet, for the drivers had thrown water upon me. I heard the boom of the guns and the crash of bursting shells. I tried to rise, but my head seemed to float away from me and I felt myself striking the ground, but I did not feel myself falling. They lifted me on the wagon, and the oxen moved off. My head and face were sticky with thick blood and dust, and I was in such pain that I did not know where the pain was.

READ A GOOD BOOK OFTEN.
But Let the Interval Between Readings Be Fairly Long.
So great has been the affection of readers for the books that have given them delight that literature is full of proofs of gratitude toward noble books. There have been countless comparisons and metaphors used to make clear the relation between the book and the reader. Perhaps the most original was hit upon by Coleridge, who compares an excellent book to a well chosen and well tended fruit tree. He says, "We may recur to it year after year, and it will supply the same nourishment and the same gratification if only we ourselves return to it with the same healthy appetite." But, though his simile pleases the fancy, it does not quite satisfy the judgment. While the fruit of a tree must yield much the same flavor always, the gratification we experience from reading must always differ according to the condition of mind of him who reads. It has been said that a traveler can bring home only what he takes with him, which means that the pleasure derived from traveling is entirely dependent upon the capacity of the traveler's mind. One's taste may change and one's ability to understand and appreciate is constantly changing, all of which points the moral that it is an excellent thing to read a good book often, provided the intervals between readings are fairly long.—St. Nicholas.

Postal Antiquity.
A recent discussion of certain postal grievances in the British house of commons has recalled the history of the post. Posts are mentioned in Scripture. In Job ix, 25, it is written, "My days are swifter than a post," and again in the book of Esther, chapter vii, letters were sent "by posts on horseback." The word, of course, here means runner. To Cyrus has been ascribed the establishment of systematic couriers, and the post has flourished throughout Persia, and Augustus is credited with introducing post chaises at Rome. It was in the reign of James I. that a postal system was introduced into England.

Tribes of Blue and Red Indians.
Red haired negroes are scarce enough, but an equally curious freak of nature is seen in the Griegos Indians, near the City of Mexico. They are light complexioned, and the majority have blue eyes and light hair. They dress peculiarly in two shades of blue, and their clothing is good and well made and generally ornamented with the bead and silk embroidery of which Indians are so fond. Their houses are better built and furnished than is usual among Indians, and many have pianos and other musical instruments, upon which they play with considerable skill. These Griegos have no commercial or social connections with other tribes, holding aloof from even those who live at the base of the mountain on which the village is situated. They raise their own food, do their own manufacturing, have their own schools, churches and social institutions and seldom or never marry outside their own tribe. There is said to be another tribe of blue eyed, fair haired Indians, who have the appearance of Germans, living in the Sierra Madre mountains in the state of Durango.

Curious Manx Customs.
On July 5 every year all the officials of the Isle of Man, including the clergy in their surplices, walk to the top of Tynwald hill, and from the top of it the laws made during the year are promulgated in Manx and English. This promulgation of the laws on Tynwald hill is as necessary as the royal assent to the validity of all laws passed by the Manx legislature. This is one of the many relics which the old Norsemen left behind, and it dates so far back that its origin is lost in the mists of antiquity.—Liverpool Mercury.

Getting It Right.
A schoolteacher instructing her classes in grammar wrote this sentence on the board for correction: "The horse and the cow is in the lot." No one seemed to know what was wrong with it all at last a little little boy raised his hand. "What is it, Johnny?" asked the teacher. "You should put the lady first," corrected Johnny.

Logic.
"Now, then," thundered the temperance orator, "what causes most of the crime in this world? Drink! And what causes drink?"
"Thirst!" cried a voice in the rear of the hall.—Philadelphia Press.

The Simple Life.
"To what extent do you believe in the simple life?"
"By never indulging in those things that you do not care for,"
